

History 318-Spring 2009

Europe in the Era of Total War: 1890-1945

By 1945, Europe was in ruins. Entire cities had been leveled by the destructive powers of industrialized warfare, the Holocaust had introduced genocide into the modern world, and the cultural, political, and social norms of the 19th century had been irrevocably transformed. What made such violence possible, and how did ordinary men and women experience it? History 318 will explore the political, economic, social, and cultural forces that both caused and were destroyed by the savagery of the early 20th century.
